

The International Atherosclerosis Society is very pleased to announce the

Antonio M. Gotto, Jr. Prize in Atherosclerosis Research

The aim of the Gotto Prize is to encourage basic, clinical, and translational research in areas relating to the causes, prevention, and treatment of cardiovascular disease globally. The award recipient will have provided and continues to provide outstanding scientific, medical, or organizational advancement in our ability to understand the causes and to reduce the development of atherosclerosis.

The winner of this prize in 2012 was Helen H. Hobbs, MD.

The Prize is sponsored by Weill Cornell Medical College and the International Atherosclerosis Society.

We value your suggestions of candidates for this prestigious award which will be presented during the upcoming XVII International Symposium on Atherosclerosis, May 23-26, 2015 in Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

Please send your nomination along with a paragraph in support of your candidate to the Selection Committee for its consideration to ias@bcm.edu by Thursday, November 13, 2014.